

I would like for the FCC to reject the challenge by the Consumer Bankers Assn to Indiana's Telephone Privacy law requesting the imposition of the federal guideline on "established business relationship" exemption to the Indiana law. The exemption written clearly into the Indiana law has been working well for consumers and has helped reduce unwanted and annoying calls, and should not be adjusted by requiring it to be over ridden by the federal guidelines. Indiana's attorney general estimates over 500 million unnecessary and intrusive calls will be received each year if the federal guideline is required. Consumers are free to contact merchants, bankers, etc, at will if they desire information, and do not need to be harrassed at home.
